It is based on the Welsh-based Gorsedd, which was founded by Iolo Morganwg in 1792. An important part of the open Gorsedh is the awarding of bardships to individuals for meritorious work for Cornish culture. Thus the Gorsedh acts in many ways as a form of "honours system". Bardships are awarded for study in the Cornish language, services to Cornish music and encouraging the arts amongst other things. Initiate Bards are given Bardic names by the Grand Bard who welcomes them into the College of Bards. These names are in Cornish and will often refer somehow to the reason for their bardship: other Bardic names refer to the Bard's personal or family name, or describe the Bards themselves. This 2013 ceremony features our archivist, Pam Lomax receiving her bardship.

60	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	Newlyn	Mousehole	Title: Coastal Village Description: The coastal village is Mousehole, it follows the fishermen and their families through a typical day (and night) fishing, shopping,school Maker: British Council Films Runtime: 10 mins Date: 1943 Points of interest: The original 1943 description read like this 'A film of a Cornish fishing village. Newlyn Bay, sheltered by headlands, is geographically an ideal place for a fishing community. The houses, sturdily built of Cornish stone, are grouped round the harbour and church. Fishermen go to sea in all weathers. Shots included deep-sea herring fishing in the early autumn.' Although the film is supposed to be exclusively Mousehole, it shows shots of Newlyn Harbour throughout. In the last few minutes Newlyn Harbour features, with fishermen unloading their catch. The fish pass through the market where they are boxed and loaded on lorries. The skipper receives payment from the offices. A few minutes in they refer to "the church in the middle of the village" and show a square turret church (not Paul) and graveyard, if you can tell me where in the village it was! I would be very interested!!

He was educated at Marlborough and at Magdalen College, Oxford, although he did not complete his degree course. In 1930, Betjeman became the editor of an architectural magazine. Consequently he became a lifelong champion of Victorian and Edwardian art and architecture. He is mainly known as a writer of light verse, some of which was satirical but he also wrote essays and guidebooks. He was awarded a CBE in 1960 and knighted in 1969. In 1972, he became poet laureate. Throughout his childhood, the family went for holidays to Trebetherick near Polzeath in Cornwall, where his father owned a number of properties. These seem to have been happy days and Betjeman's long love affair with Cornwall is reflected in much of his poetry such as "Seaside Golf". He also describes his childhood memories of the county in "Summoned by Bells", his blank verse autobiography. He died in 1984 aged 77 at his home in Trebetherick. He was buried at St Enodoc church near Rock.
82	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	Art	Harold Harvey (1874 - 1941)	Title: The works of Harold Harvey Description: Photograph slideshow of the works of Harold Harvey set to music Maker: Ernesto Y Amalia Runtime: 11mins Date: 2015 Points of Interest: Harold Harvey was one of the few Cornish-born artists associated with the Newlyn Colony and the Lamorna Artists. He was the son of a bank manager and grew up in Penzance in the 1870s and 1880s, just when the area was becoming an artistic haven. Harold Harvey studied with Norman Garstin, and in the 1890s he travelled to Paris to study at the Atelier Julian. On his return he continued to live in Penzance until his marriage to fellow painter and regular artists' model Gertrude Bodinar, when they moved to Maen Cottage in Newlyn. His early work follows the style of the Newlyn Artists but by 1908/10 he had started to move away from that style of work utilising a much brighter palette and a simplification of form. Until 1916 Harvey concentrated on rural and marine themes but from then on his subject matter broadened to include sophisticated interiors. Harvey had many solo shows and exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1898 and then regularly from 1907 to 1941 (although he was never elected as an associate of the Royal Academy). He rarely went to London and preferred to stay in his native Cornwall. He died in Newlyn in 1941. The music accompanying the slideshow is "Im Glanz Des Morgennebels" by Gregor Daniel

83	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	Art	Walter Langley (1852 - 1922)	Title: The works of Walter Langley Description: Photograph slideshow of the works of Walter Langley, set to music Maker: Lucrezia012 Runtime: 4mins Date: 2014 Points of Interest: Walter Langley (June 8, 1852 – March 21, 1922) was an English painter and founder of the Newlyn School of plein air artists. He was born in Birmingham and his father was a journeyman tailor. At 15 he was apprenticed to a lithographer. At 21 he won a scholarship to South Kensington and he studied designing there for two years. The sometimes highly ornate work is mainly in gold and silver and in a Renaissance style. He returned to Birmingham but took up painting full-time, and in 1881 was elected an Associate of the Royal Birmingham Society of Artists. In the same year he was offered £500 for a year's work by a Mr Thrupp (a Birmingham photographer). With this money he and his family moved to Newlyn where he was one of the first artists to settle. Politically left wing for his era, he was noted for his social realist portrayals of working class figures, particularly fishermen and their families. He was a supporter of Charles Bradlaugh, a radical socialist politician. Many of his paintings reflect his sympathy with the working-class fisher-folk amongst whom he lived. One of the best known is his 1883 For Men Must Work and Women Must Weep (Birmingham Museum and Art Gallery) based on Charles Kingsley's poem The Three Fishers (1851). Another is Between The Tides (1901; Warrington Museum & Art Gallery). Although one of the first to settle in the Newlyn artists' colony Newlyn School, Langley initially benefited little from its growing fame, partly because of his working-class origins and partly because until 1892 he painted largely in watercolour rather than the more prestigious medium of oils. His early training in lithography gives his paintings a detail and texture that show his technical skills. Later in his career his reputation grew. One of Langley's paintings was singled out as "a beautiful and true work of art" by Leo Tolstoy in his book What is Art?, while in 1895 Langley was invited by the Uffizi to contribute a self-portrait to hang alongside those of Raphael, Rubens and Rembrandt in their collection of portraits of great artists. Today his work is considered "vital to the image of the Newlyn School" and "alongside Stanhope Forbes ... the most consistent in style and substantial in output". The music is a jazz/blues piece called Unwind by Jen Murdza

For better publicity, it was planned that a Newlyn fishing boat, manned with the fishermen whose homes were threatened, would sail to London and dock at Westminster Pier. On Monday 19 October 1937 the Rosebud left Newlyn and began its journey around southern England and up the Thames, arriving to great attention from the press on Wednesday 21 October. The petition was duly delivered and the Rosebud and its crew stayed in London until the next week and sailed back to Newlyn and resumed their working lives.

87	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	Newlyn	Torrey Canyon	Title: The Torrey Canyon disaster Description: A number of news items about the Torrey Canyon disaster Maker: British Pathe, Universal Newsreel, PenzanceParish Runtime: 25mins (total) Date: 1967 Points of Interest: 5 different news reports on the Torrey Canyon disaster. 3 from British Pathe and 1 each from PenzanceParish and Universal Newsreel. Torrey Canyon struck Pollard's Rock on Seven Stones reef, between the Cornish mainland and the Isles of Scilly, on 18 March. It became grounded and, several days later, began to break up. In an effort to reduce the size of the oil spill, the British government decided to set the wreck on fire, by means of air strikes from the Fleet Air Arm (FAA) and Royal Air Force (RAF). On 28 March 1967, FAA Blackburn Buccaneers from RNAS Lossiemouth dropped 1,000 lb (454 kg) bombs on the ship. Afterwards RAF Hawker Hunter from RAF Chivenor dropped cans of jet fuel (kerosene), to fuel the blaze. However, the fire was put out by high tides, and further strikes were needed to re-ignite the oil, by FAA de Havilland Sea Vixens from RNAS Yeovilton and Buccaneers from the RNAS Brawdy, as well as RAF Hunters of No 1(F) Sqn from RAF West Raynham with napalm. Bombing continued into the next day, until Torrey Canyon finally sank. A total of 161 bombs, 16 rockets, 1,500 tons of napalm and 44,500 litres of kerosene were used. Attempts to contain the oil using foam-filled containment booms were largely unsuccessful, due to the booms' fragility in high seas.

On the way, she encountered a severe storm and the hawser of the tug Bustler parted, whilst the other tug Melinda III slipped her tow. In storm force conditions Warspite dropped one of her anchors in Mount's Bay, which did not hold, and the storm drove her onto Mount Mopus Ledge near Cudden Point. Later refloating herself she went hard aground a few yards away in Prussia Cove. Her skeleton crew of seven was saved by the Penlee Lifeboat W. & S. There were several attempts to refloat her but the hull was badly damaged. In 1950 an attempt to re-float her was tried. A large crowd & media watched on as the salvage crew set to work. Despite the use of 24 compressor tanks pumping air into her tanks, the salvage failed. There was insufficient depth of water to float her clear of the reef in a rising south westerly gale. The salvage boat Barnet, standing guard overnight under the Warspite's bows was holed in the engine room, towed off and eventually drifted ashore at Long Rock, a few miles to the west. However, by August the battleship was finally beached off St Michael's Mount and after further salvage another attempt was made to refloat her in November. The Falmouth tug Masterman spent the night on the Hogus Rocks after failing to tow Warspite; and her sister tug Tradesman had 60 feet (18 m) of wire wrapped around her propeller when trying to haul Masterman off the rocks. Aided by her compressor and two jet engines from an experimental aircraft the hulk was finally moved 130 feet (40 m) closer to shore and by the summer of 1955 she disappeared from view. According to the contractors, it remains the largest salvage operation ever carried out in British waters. A memorial stone was placed near the sea wall at Marazion and later moved a short distance. The stone was unveiled by Admiral Sir Charles Madden and prayers were read by a former crew member. The remains of the masts lie in the yard at Porthenalls House, Prussia Cove and one portion was erected on a headland, overlooking Prussia Cove. One of her 15-inch tompions and her chapel door held by the Royal Naval Museum in Portsmouth. Her nameplate is held by the pub, The Wink, in Lamorna, Cornwall. Her ships wheel was given from King George V to King Haakon VII in 1947, who later gave it to the City of Narvik. It is kept in the City Hall of Narvik.

At a lifeboat station in Cornwall fishermen are ready to man the lifeboat and go to the aid of any ship in distress however rough the sea. From time to time an inspector from the headquarters of Britain's voluntary lifeboat organization [sic], the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, carries out a rigid inspection and test of the boat. A fault in the propellor is remedied in time for the men to put out to sea in response to an SOS from a ship in difficulties.'" The film is staged throughout with dramatised scenes. The main character in this film, Bill Blewitt, was a genuine Cornish fisherman and postman, living in Mousehole. After a chance encounter with director Harry Watt, he starred in GPO documentary The Saving of Bill Blewitt (1937), and would go on to have roles in a handful of feature films such as Nine Men (1943). He also appears in the British Council Film Trinity House.

This is how It was introduced "Mrs Laura Knight - only the second woman to be elected an Associate of the Royal Academy since the 18th Century is featured" I think she was actually the 3rd as there were 2 elected women in 1876 Maker: Pathe News Runtime: 2 mins Date: 1927 Points of Interest: Standing at an easel, Mrs Knight sketches a seated model. Some of her artwork is visible in the studio. The artist is described in a title as: "tireless and sturdy" and is dressed in an eccentric peasant style with coiled plaits. Another model is shown and Mrs Knight sketches her in charcoal. By a camera trick the image dissolves into a painting of the same subject as Mrs Knight adds the finishing touches with a paintbrush. No Sound.

Knight was born in Nottingham, England, the son of an architect, and studied at Nottingham School of Art under Wilson Foster. At the School of Art he met fellow artist Laura Johnson, whom he married in 1903. Laura Knight (1877 - 1970). Born in Derbyshire, Laura Johnson was encouraged to paint by her artistic mother and first went to study at Nottingham School of Art at the age of thirteen. In 1907, the Knights came to Cornwall, at first taking lodgings in Newlyn and later moving to Lamorna, where they became central figures in the growing artists colony. Laura specialised in combining landscapes and figures, painting nude models out of doors, caused some controversy among the local population, but her charming and lively personality overcame most resistance.

Newlyn hatchery reared lobsters are released at around 3 months old and released around the coast of Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly. They nurture them through their most vulnerable stage in their life cycle (when they are part of the plankton) where there are a lot of predators. When released, they are still only 1cm in length but they stand a very high chance of survival because they become demersal at this stage in their life cycle. This means living on or near the bottom of the sea. There are very few sightings of juvenile lobsters in the wild and researchers believe they spend their first two years of life buried in the gravel. Research undertaken in Norway showed survival rates for hatchery reared juvenile lobsters were 30-80%.

Tinstone, "black tin" as the Cornish miners call it, is just plain tin ore when it comes up from the mines. This film explores the processes involved, starting with "The first crushing". Ore is seen being shovelled into a crushing machine. After the crushing, the ore is transported to the stamping and washing mill. It is stamped into a fine powder by a machine which is practically a large mechanically worked pestle and mortar. Finally a series of washing operations separate all the extraneous matter,sand, etc. and leaves the pure tinstone - ready for smelting.

This film shows the capping off that allows the water to build up behind it Maker: Pathe News Runtime: 4mins Date: 1961 Points of Interest: Trewidden Vean, a substantial farm, and the smallholding at Nanquitho existed for hundreds of years, with a reference to the latter recorded in 1763. The reservoir was first given statutory approval in 1938 (Under the Penzance Corporation Act 1938) but construction was deferred until after World War II and finally completed by the West Cornwall Water Board in 1961. It is the principal source of water for the Penwith area. The valley of Trewidden Vean, now known as the Lost Valley, was evacuated starting in 1938, with the last family leaving in 1961; it was then flooded and became the Drift Reservoir. The water level in the reservoir sometimes drops low enough to reveal the remains of houses and roads; this happened in the 1970s, the 1990s, and in the summer of 2018. The 'frogmen' are R. Gwillian, A. Wilkinson, W. Sweet, R. D. Preston with Mr. Purse, Chief Engineer of the project.

Despite improvements made on his father William's pioneering two-colour tinted system, which used alternate red and blue-green frames, it failed to reach a large audience due to inherent technical defects in projection, such as a heavy flicker and colour fringing. A new preservation colour negative has been made using a digital intermediate in order to combine colours, eliminate flicker and depict motion at 24 frames per second. The two colours used are reproductions of the original tints found in the only nitrate show reel known to exist. The Eric Anker-Petersen Charity generously supported the BFI in this project.

244	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	West Cornwall	Mining	Title: Tin Mining, Drill & Blast, Cornwall Description: A documentary film about the decline of the Cornish tin mining industry Maker: BBC Runtime: 28mins Date: 2003 Points of Interest: The tin that was mined in Cornwall helped to fuel the hi-tech consumer revolution that changed all our lives, but the close-knit communities that worked in the mines paid a heavy price. Until the post-war era, under investment in the mines made them hazardous places to work. Through archive film footage and testimony from miners and their families, Nation On Film examines the backbreaking toil that went on hundreds of feet below the Cornish landscape. The daughter of a miner describes how she would try and stop her father from going to work because of the dust disease that killed many miners. Early black and white film shows surface workers attempting to protect themselves from arsenic, which is also found in tin mines, by tying handkerchiefs around their faces. The mines began to close when the system for supporting the international price of tin collapsed. The Cornish miners took their case to Westminster but were refused long-term assistance. As the mines closed, a sense of betrayal was felt in the mining communities and the Cornish countryside still bears the scars of the disused mines.

Construction took ten months. She is a replica of Mystery, which made a one way voyage to Australia in 1854–55. Spirit of Mystery was launched on 21 June 2008. Incorporated into Spirit of Mystery is wood from Cutty Sark, and HMS Victory, with some of the rigging coming from SS Great Britain. Construction of Spirit of Mystery closely followed the design of the original luggers. The only concessions to modernity were watertight bulkheads and heavier ballast. Electrics were fitted, as a legal requirement, to have navigation lights. An engine had been fitted but was not used on the journey to Australia. Internally, oil lamps were used and navigation was by the sun and stars.

Pender; "He that does right shall come right" – Billy "Bosun" Roberts, upon the Rosebud's arrival at Westminster Pier. (All other lyrics and captions – Gavin Nicol) Gavin's comments: I would like to respectfully dedicate this film to the people of Newlyn. I also give a nod to my father, James (Jim) Nicol (1939-2021), who owned the Rosebud (renamed Cynthia Yvonne) much later on, operating her from Hayle Quay during a few of her latter years - and my early ones. I remember her well Though dad was told something about his boat having travelled to London, it wasn't until many years later that we found out all about her illustrious past On which note, I gratefully acknowledge Mike Sagar Fenton's excellent book "The Rosebud and the Newlyn Clearances" (Truran 2003) as the primary source of factual information used in producing the soundtrack for this film."
